

When trying to maximize the adoption of a behavior in a community such as a school or rural village, how should one target individuals? This talk will explore the empirical frontiers of this research question, discussing strategies that leverage the structure of social networks to target individuals expected to have an outsized impact on adoption, as well as how to evaluate the efficacy of such ideas using modern ideas from off-policy evaluation.